

WISER: Finding stuff

Journal articles

Kerry Webb, Deputy Librarian, English Faculty Library & Angela Carritt, Bodleian Libraries' User Education Coordinator

Why use journals?

CONTENT: they provide short articles on specific topics, including the most recent research in your subject area

CURRENCY: published in parts which come out several times a year

CONVENIENCE: whilst books take a long time to write (and read!) journals are quicker to browse and often have dedicated indexing tools

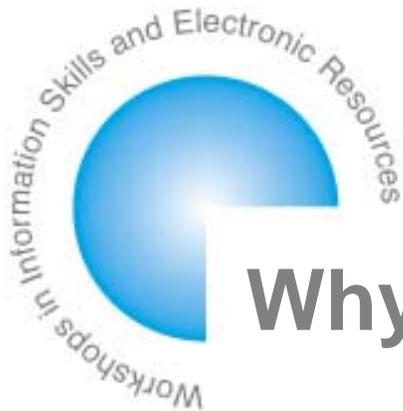

Structure of the session

Quick overview of Oxford e-journals (within OxLIP+)

Researching specific topics using journal indexes

Practical step by step exercises

What is a journal index?

A database which contains information about individual articles in journals, and often indexes book chapters from edited collections as well as book reviews in journals

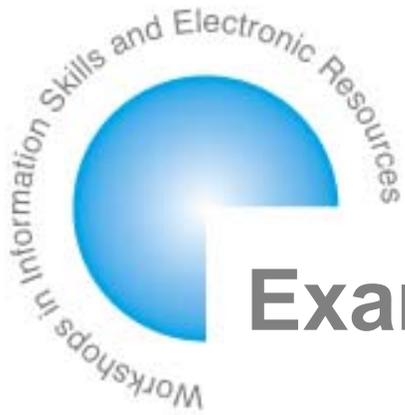

Indexes are fully searchable by author, title, journal title and, more importantly, by subject area

Indexes are valuable research tools when combined with Oxford eJournals

Some indexes allow you to export citations to bibliographic software, e.g. RefWorks

You can email, print or download your search results

They are not repositories for full text journal articles, but can provide links to the articles indexed

Example demonstration

Historical Abstracts, hosted by Ebsco

Available via

OxLIP+
OXFORD LIBRARIES
INFORMATION PLATFORM

Points to remember

Oxford eJournals is the fastest way to access electronic journal resources if you know the title you are looking for

It is important to remember that e-journals might not have the same coverage as our print collections, and some recent issues will have a delayed electronic release date

Journal indexes are valuable research tools for searching for journal articles and book chapters on specific research topics

To access electronic resources from home, you will need to use your Oxford Single Sign On. For details go to:

http://www.bodleian.ox.ac.uk/eresources/remote_access
