LAST MODIFIED: 10 MAY 2010

DOI: 10.1093/OBO/9780199730414-0030

Introduction

The Haitian Revolution has continually triggered scholarly (and literary) interest since its inception, thanks to its unique blend of racial, international, and political factors. But it has remained largely peripheral to distinctive historical narratives. In particular, Saint-Domingue and Haiti are interwoven with the narrative of the French Revolution, to which they were closely connected, in the literature until the end of the 20th century. Aside from a few precursors, increased attention to the Haitian Revolution emerged only with the commemoration of the bicentennial of the French Revolution in 1989. Yet it was the coming of the bicentennial of Haiti's independence in 2004 that inspired numerous authors on both sides of the Atlantic to scrutinize the topic. On the French side, scholarly production mainly consisted of collections of essays connected to commemorative conferences. French Caribbean scholars based in Martinique and Guadeloupe also contributed to this considerable effort, together with Haitian scholars, for whom, of course, the revolution was a foundational event. On the American side, the production of collections of essays accompanied the publication of major monographs. Recent North American interest in Haiti can be linked to the development of the Atlantic paradigm, which has induced younger writers to focus on a non-British Atlantic. On both sides of the Atlantic and in the Caribbean, new research on Haiti is linked to the dominant historiographical question of slavery (in all its dimensions, social, political, and cultural), together with rising sensitivity to questions of hybridity, creolization, and colonial and postcolonial discussions in literature, philosophy, and cultural studies. Far from remaining peripheral, the Haitian Revolution has thus rapidly moved to the center of historical attention. It remains a vivid symbol of black resistance and identity for contemporary Haiti, the Caribbean, and beyond, which explains why a number of authors on the revolution (mainly in French) are also novelists, playwrights, poets, journalists, or philosophers.

Introduction

The Hanseatic League was a confederation of commercial cities in the North Sea coasts that had political organizations. The League's origins have dated from 1356, but its roots are much older and lie in the medieval period. The League's privileges elsewhere. The Hansa remained an important collective force until the 16th century and retained its institutions and common cultural forms for much longer. The main outlines of its organization and history were first established following the foundation of the German Empire in 1870.

THE ROLL OF THE PARLIAMENT [HELD] IN THE FIRST YEAR OF THE REIGN OF KING RICHARD THE THIRD.

Membrane 1

[The opening of parliament.]

[1.] Be it remembered that on Friday, 23 January in the first year of the reign of King Richard the third since the conquest [1484], that is, on the first day of parliament, with the lord king sitting on the royal throne in the Painted Chamber within his palace of Westminster, then being present many lords spiritual and temporal, and the commons of the realm of England, assembled at the aforesaid parliament at the king's command, the venerable father John, bishop of Lincoln, chancellor of England memorably declared and announced the reasons for summoning the aforesaid parliament, taking as his theme: 'In the body there are many limbs, but not all have the same function'. [1] In which words he gravely and very astutely explained the fealty which subjects of the king and the functions individual members owe to the principal member, asserting that there are three kinds of body, namely the natural, the aggregate and the politic, and going on to suggest that one coin, the tenth, [2] had been lost from the most precious fabric of the body politic of England and that to hunt for it and find it would require the king and all the lords spiritual and temporal to be very assiduous and diligent during this parliament; concluding that after the finding of the tenth coin, which signifies perfection, our body politic of England would endure gloriously and for a long time, healthy, safe and free from all damage or injury; the king, the great men of the realm and the commons eternally cherishing peace outward and inward and the author of that peace. At the end of which declaration and announcement, the aforesaid chancellor in the king's name firmly ordered the commons to assemble on the following day in their common house as usual and elect one of their number as their speaker, and to present the man thus elected to the same lord king. The same chancellor announced moreover that the said lord king, wishing justice to be done more swiftly both to denizens and aliens wishing to complain in the said parliament, had appointed and assigned certain receivers of the petitions to be presented in the same parliament in the following form.

Receivers of petitions from England, Ireland, Wales and Scotland:

Sir Thomas Barowe
Sir Thomas Hutton
Sir William Bolton
Sir Richard Skipton.

tance to the State for her to have an Eye upon all that should be transacted in his Army.

THE artful Prince's long pretended to be very averse to parting from the King, and seem'd only to consent at last thro' a respectful Obedience.
Every Thing being order'd to be got ready for her Departure, she set out with a most magnificent Equipage, whereof Jencha made her a Present, and she was attended as far as the Frontiers of Carama- nia by his own Guards; to whom, at parting, she gave so many Marks of her Liberality, and care-fed them so highly, that she gain'd the Hearts of the whole Corps. Uffim-Cassan being appriz'd of her Arrival, march'd his Troops out of his Camp, and drew them up in Order of Battle in a Plain whereby she was to pass; after which, he advanced to meet her with the main Body of his Army.

SCOTCH AND IRISH PAUPERS REMOVAL BILL.

Order for Second Reading read.

MR. BOUVERIE said, that the Bill had been before the House for about three months, and had been postponed from time to time in the hope of his finding an opportunity to explain its provisions. But he had found much opposition to it, not only in the metropolis and manufacturing districts, but also in Scotland, and what surprised him much, in Ireland too. He was convinced the Bill was founded on justice, and would have been a great improvement in the administration of the poor law, and a material benefit to unfortunate labourers. He, however, saw no chance of carrying it during the present [2157] Session, and therefore he proposed, with the consent of the House, to discharge the Order.

LORD NAAS said, he wished to correct the impression that Irish Members were opposed to it; they were surprised that it had not carried out the recommendations of the Committee that sat for two years, and the withdrawal of the Bill would be much regretted.

MR. W. WILLIAMS said, he was glad the Bill was withdrawn, and he likewise hoped it would never be presented to the House again, for it was perfectly impracticable.

MR. MAGUIRE said, he could assure the House, although he had placed an Amendment on the paper, that he had no intention to oppose the Bill.

Order discharged.

Bill withdrawn.

Hansard, Commons Sitting of Friday, June 27, 1856.

—	£1 to £2.	4	Satisfactory.
—	—	24	Unsatisfactory.

No. 3.

Lord Ponsonby to Viscount Palmerston.—(Received March 3.)

(No. 19, Confidential.)

(Extract.)

Therapia, February 4, 1839.

TWO days after the departure of the January messenger, I had the honour of a visit, here, from the Internuncio. He spoke extremely openly to me on the political state of affairs, and left no room for doubt in my mind, of his own conviction, that the Austrian Government would resist (if necessary,) by force, the establishment of Russian authority over this country. He very explicitly said he thought war likely, very likely; when I said to him, that I earnestly wished some means could be found to secure against future danger the interests of England and Europe (bound up with the real independency of the Ottoman Government), he replied, that he feared it would be impossible to induce Russia to consent to arrangements that would produce that security.

He thinks war will take place, and entertains a great opinion of the means of Russia to seize upon Constantinople by a maritime coup de main, and thereby to obtain an almost irresistible power. He admitted

I difference in the end. Philip Goodhart, a joint secretary of the 1922 committee, who was to vocated a referendum in opposi-settled Government and party intends to offer his essay to the oup for publication in Crossbow xt year. And Mr. Norman St. zvas, the devil's advocate on the ide, is a polemicist who never utlets. Here or there, soon or : tournament will take place. theless, I regret the blackball at are no doubt idiosyn-reasons. I would have a debate matching two well-d champions between the covers ook not because my mind needs up but because I find myself

... enough continental examples of referenda to make it a strange objection on the lips of British Europeans who are comprehensively recommending to the electorate the adoption of the European way of doing things.

I thought I fell over the same kind of stumbling-block the other day when I followed in the footsteps of Mr. St. John-Stevas as he argued that the referendum (I paraphrase and condense) is an alien device that has no part in the British constitution and would not fit into it. Where the electors are eventually to be asked to adopt so much that is no part of the British constitution, if they leave it to Mr. St. John-Stevas, a referendum might seem to some electors a mere gnat for the ... point that a referendum seems attractive to those anti-Market politicians who are by no means sure that they can win a majority against the Treaty of Rome in Parliament. That may well be part of the thinking of Mr. Douglas Jay, Mr. Neil Marten, and their all party anti-Market group, and of Mr. Wedgwood Benn, who has never been numbered by me among the warmest of Europeans. But it gets us nowhere. Mr. Jay and the rest will fairly retort that Mr. Heath, Mr. Wilson, and all the Europeans oppose a referendum because they fear that they could not carry a majority outside in the country. That, also, might have a grain of truth in it. when the hour of decision comes, All in all, I remain profoundly con- going into question of in politics should be
