

Welcome to this iSkill session on Research Metrics and Citation Analysis Tools.

This session is aimed at individuals involved in research in the sciences and social sciences because the tools available are mainly to do with journal and journal articles. However, some tools for Book metrics will be covered.

You may have questions such as:

- Which journal publish articles in my research area?
- Does this journal generally publish material that ends up being impactful?
- How can I find evidence of the impact of my research?
- Has my paper been cited or discussed?
- Which are the top papers or authors in my research field?

The metrics and tools that will be described in this session can help find answers to these types of questions.

I will explain what research metrics are which tools to use for different metrics and provide some recommendations on the use of metrics.