Reportedly the Kaiser, Emperor Kaiser Wilhelm II, agreed to the use of the name only on condition that the ship would never be referred to as 'she'. Emperor was only in service from her maiden voyage in June 1913 until the outbreak of the First War just over a year later. She was in Germany at that time and remained there, inactive, until the end of the war. At the end of the war, Emperor was seized as part of War Reparations and leased to Cunard for 1920-1921 service under her original name. At the end of that period she was purchased by Cunard and renamed the Berengaria, which remained in service until the mid-1930s.

Sayers 168	Holland-America 1939 Employee Archive	1	Letter of employment, 1938	Holland America Line	1938	Nieuw Amsterdam		Letters			A small archive of 10 items from a Holland America Line employee, Johanna Weiking, employed as a nurse for a 1939 spring cruise of the Nieuw Amsterdam. It includes a rarely seen Letter of Employment, a Passenger List confirming Miss Weiking as a Nurse, along with the names of the affluent passengers, several of whom were accompanied by servants. As one of three nurses, she could rotate to provide 24-hour service as either in the Infirmary or on call in one of three 8-hour per day shifts. The Concert Program and the pages of Spanish Lessons indicate that upper levels of staff were permitted to mingle with the passengers and attend passenger events. This feature is not contained in any other primary source documentation in the collection to my knowledge.

Sayers 196	Menu & Card Combos	PM1	1899-04-04, Barbarossa, Norddeutscher Lloyd, Breakfast	North German Lloyd	1899	Barbarossa		Menu postcard			A collection of cruise ship or ocean liner menu and postcard combinations; perforated or folded for easy detachment amassed over a forty-year period. A scarce commodity in the original state, most are found as either the menu only or a post card with the ship's name and date printed across the top of a postcard. The majority are from the early 1900s corresponding to the popularity of the somewhat newly introduced post card and produced by Red Star Line, German Lloyd, Cunard, Anchor Line, White Star, NYK, and Allan Lines. Red Star Line and NYK Line also produced these again in the late 1920s and early 1930s. Items 78 and 79 in this group depict variations on this approach: the menu folds up and makes a letter format with space for a message on two of the three panels. Additionally, this grouping includes eight standard menus (76 numbered series; gilt-edged cards), exemplifying the sequence of offering during a single voyage in combination with some of the Anchor Line menu/postcard items.

Sayers 196	Menu & Card Combos	PM21	1907-06-03, Bremen, Norddeutscher Lloyd, Lunch (?)	North German Lloyd	1907	Bremen		Menu postcard		A collection of cruise ship or ocean liner menu and postcard combinations; perforated or folded for easy detachment amassed over a forty-year period. A scarce commodity in the original state, most are found as either the menu only or a post card with the ship's name and date printed across the top of a postcard. The majority are from the early 1900s corresponding to the popularity of the somewhat newly introduced post card and produced by Red Star Line, German Lloyd, Cunard, Anchor Line, White Star, NYK, and Allan Lines. Red Star Line and NYK Line also produced these again in the late 1920s and early 1930s. Items 78 and 79 in this group depict variations on this approach: the menu folds up and makes a letter format with space for a message on two of the three panels. Additionally, this grouping includes eight standard menus (76 numbered series; gilt-edged cards), exemplifying the sequence of offering during a single voyage in combination with some of the Anchor Line menu/postcard items.

Sayers 243	Reford Estate Deck Plans 1	RRDP1	Anchor Line; California c1924	Anchor Line	c.1924	California		Deck plan		A collection of 20 large sheet tissue paper deck plans of Cunard and Anchor Line vessels of the early 1920s acquired from the Robert Reford estate. These fragile plans show the locations of public rooms. Among other instructive values, the location of the public rooms underscores the segregation of women passengers. Specifically, a Smoking Room has Gentleman's Toilets close at hand, and a bar in the Smoking Room. This was for men to retire to the Smoking Room for drinks, a cigar and perhaps a card game. For the women, there was a separate room with nearby Ladies toilets – but no bar. On the Berengaria, the Smoking Room is on the deck directly above the Ladies Salon and Writing Room, so even the location showed the women positioned on a deck below the men. As well as writing, women were expected to read and to discuss household matters.

Sayers 244	Reford Estate Deck Plans 2	RRDP18	Scythia 1924	Cunard	1924	Scythia		Deck plan		A collection of 20 large sheet tissue paper deck plans of Cunard and Anchor Line vessels of the early 1920s acquired from the Robert Reford estate. These fragile plans show the locations of public rooms. Among other instructive values, the location of the public rooms underscores the segregation of women passengers. Specifically, a Smoking Room has Gentleman's Toilets close at hand, and a bar in the Smoking Room. This was for men to retire to the Smoking Room for drinks, a cigar and perhaps a card game. For the women, there was a separate room with nearby Ladies toilets – but no bar. On the Berengaria, the Smoking Room is on the deck directly above the Ladies Salon and Writing Room, so even the location showed the women positioned on a deck below the men. As well as writing, women were expected to read and to discuss household matters.

Sayers 252	Russia Cruise Shore Excursion 1930s	RU1-28	Russia Shore Excursion 1930s Manuscript p1 to p28		1930s			Manuscript			A unique and very useful archive featuring a 28-page typed document and 29 photographs and post cards of primary source material of Russia during the Stalin era in the 1930s. There are two elements; a detailed 28-page typed description of the travels and observations of a tourist on a Cruise in the 1930s who opted for what appears to be an extended shore excursion; and photographs that illustrate the features that the Stalin government approved for release. The photos show what the regime wanted people to see and capture during their visit, in contrast to some of the writer's personal first-hand observations.

Sayers 254	Scandinavian Lines Menus	SM1	1926-07-09 Gripsholm Dinner	Swedish American Line	1926	Gripsholm		Menu			A grouping of 38 menus These shipping lines reflect the Scandinavian migration to North America at the beginning of the 20th Century. Links remained and were bridged by sea. Further, the ships, in keeping with their cultural heritage, were not what one would call 'flashy' as in some of the French Line and other competing nations' ships. Reliability and predictability appear to have been the watchwords. Aesthetically the menus tend to be rather plain and unadorned with the exception of the Art Deco drama portrayed in SM27. Date from 1926 - 1939.

Sayers 264	Shipboard Photo Albums/To North America in 1924	P1-2	Photos of Dorothy (8 1/2) and Peggy (a cat); and photos of Dorothy, another girl and a sailor on board Adriatic	White Star Line	1924	Adriatic		Photo			The trip on the Adriatic chronicled in the other set of photos is unusual in that it is an English family from Darlington visiting America and then returning home. There was a greater likelihood at that time that the visiting would have been from North America to Britain. The Priest was likely an employee of the shipping line, receiving free passage to minister to the passengers on board and provide religious services as appropriate. Note also the governess, who might well have been an employee in the Children's Room earning extra money by caring for the little girl.

Sayers 265	Shipping Line Trade Cards	TC36	Orient line – The Sok Gate – duplicate of TC24	Orient Line				Trade card			Thirty-six advertising trade card for a variety of ocean liner companies in the 1880s. The eye-catching picturesque imagery on the front depicts either a vessel or a port of call and an explanatory title. The reverse provides additional information on the subject matter. Although trade cards are most often used for marketing products vs. services, it was somewhat effectively used to promote luxury travel by sea. The companies include Allan Line, American Line, Cunard, Dominion Line, Inman Line, Mallory Line, National Line, National Line, North German Lloyd Line, Orient Line and the White Star Line. Also includes an advertising postcard with the same sort of information but intended for postal use.

Sayers 268	Stereo View Cards - WW1 Shipping	SV1	Rio de Janeiro Bound for Manila - Spanish- American War			Rio de Janeiro		Stereo view card		This grouping includes 11 Stereoviews. Stereoviews of this nature are quite scarce. They stand out greatly from the usual 'travelogue' sets and provide a unique quality of photographic image of the era. The majority of these cards are shipping views in wartime, plus a few other examples. SV1, with troops heading to the Philippines, is the earliest wartime example. Then SV3 to SV6; and SV9 & SV10 provide First War illustrations. Among them, SV6, SV9 and SV10 describe the role of colored troops and capture their presence on board. The high resolution of these images facilitates close-up study of the photos and SV9 and 10 disclose the colored troops mingled on board with the 'white' ones. View SV11 is from the era but shows the colored troops heading to France rather than returning home. Close study shows that the name of the town where this photo is taken and any other identifying feature have been blocked out.

Illustrated by Will Owen. 1922-1936. Predominately Shakespearian themed characters. Some anthropomorphism. Will Owen (1869 Malta – 14 April 1957) was an English book illustrator, cartoonist, caricaturist and a commercial and poster artist, possibly best known for his iconic images of the Bisto Kids, Bovril, Lux and Lifebuoy. He received his art training at the Lambeth School of Art, and evolved a style similar to that of Tom Browne and John Hassall. During the First World War he produced cartoons for the Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News, introducing readers to new terms such as 'strafe', 'Blighty', 'pipsqueak' and 'brass'. Owen produced highly popular cartoons for the Bystander and The Sketch, and designed some posters for the Underground Group in 1926. His profusely illustrated guide, Old London Town, was published in New York by Robert M. McBride in 1922 and has been placed on the web by Project Gutenberg. His work was usually signed "WO" or "WILL OWEN" in a cartouche.

Ephemera from these ships is hard to find, partly because some of them primarily served the New Zealand trade so there is hard to find outside of that area, and partly because a number of these were smaller ships and carried a relatively small number of passengers. The best known are probably the Aorangi and the Niagara, which sailed trans-pacific into Vancouver. For the researcher or writer searching for images of obscure ships, this group is a gold mine. In addition, there are a few with useful messages (NZ16A; NZ25A; and NZ39A) as primary source information. NZ13 is a particularly unusual advertising item, and the Neptune Exemption Certificate (NZ7) which serves to remind the researcher that enough individuals traveled across the Pacific frequently enough to merit the design and printing of a Certificate to exempt them from the customary dunking, as part of the Neptune ceremony, when initially crossing the Equator. Ephemera from these ships is hard to find, partly because some of them primarily served the New Zealand trade so there is hard to find outside of that area, and partly because a number of these were smaller ships and carried a relatively small number of passengers. The best known are probably the Aorangi and the Niagara, which sailed trans-pacific into Vancouver. For the researcher or writer searching for images of obscure ships, this group is a gold mine. In addition, there are a few with useful messages (NZ16A; NZ25A; and NZ39A) as primary source information. NZ13 is a particularly unusual advertising item, and the Neptune Exemption Certificate (NZ7) which serves to remind the researcher that enough individuals traveled across the Pacific frequently enough to merit the design and printing of a Certificate to exempt them from the customary dunking, as part of the Neptune ceremony, when initially crossing the Equator.
